GREAT FEAT ACCOMPLISHED

Combined English Police and Detective Forces Succeed in Landing Mrs. Pankhurst Behind the Bars.

On the thirteenth of December he English police and detective forces, knowing the train Mrs. Pankhurst would take to Dover on her return from Paris, secreted an impressive force of detectives therein and bravely awaited the dreaded one's coming. After the train was well started, and feeling that no hoard of the militant's comrades might take warning of their leader's danger and fall upon the men and nothing upon the body to identify demolish them, the detectives marched bravely forth, surprised the woman in her apartment and arrested her on the charge of, "not having given twenty four hours notice of her intention of leaving England before going to Paris".

The police probably feared that she would go to Paris before leaving England.

On arriving at Dover the detectives with thrilling audacity, burried the member of the "weaker sex" into a strongly guarded automebile supplied by the police, and made a hair raising dash to the jail where the suffragette leader would be lead to suppose, of a regiment of his Majesty's red coats.

Pandemonium at the Royal

The arrest of Mrs. Pankhurst led to sensational and unprecedented scenes at the Royal opera House where the King and Queen were present to witness "Joan of Arc".

At the conclusion of the first act three women, occupying a box opposite to that in which their Majesing made from firekilled Alpine fir ties were seated, arose, one vigorand Engelmann spruce in Colorado. ously waving a banner inscribed, "Women Are Being Tortured in Your Majesty's prisons," while another showered thousands of leaflets on the people below, and the accorded the heroine of the opera.
